Creation of a new TWiki web

TWiki pages (or topics) are grouped together in areas called webs. These are logical areas for projects, experiments or group entities.

For example Atlas topics go in the Atlas web and likewise CMS topics go in the CMS web.

To create a new TWiki page; "TWikiTopic", simply write a WikiWord in an existing topic or press the "Create New topic" button.

Your TWikitopics should go into the most relevant area. In general, one should avoid to create a new web if something exists, e.g. anything related to software or IT services could go to the IT web and so on. Here is a list of public webs.

However if you think that you really need a new web in order to store your TWiki topics then this can be done only by the TWiki Admin. Creating a new web area is the best solution if the requirement is to create more than 10 pages and if they are to be dedicated to a group defined by an egroup. This egroup can be used in access control lists for the web.

A request should be made with details of the purpose of the new web, the access control settings that should be set and the names of the web administrators.
